What's the Best Way to Track Your Blood Pressure?

Blood pressure readings taken with a portable monitor may be a much better gauge of your prognosis than readings at the doctor's office, new research suggests. The study of nearly 64,000 adults found that "ambulatory" blood pressure monitoring was clearly better at predicting a patient's risk of dying over the next five years, versus doctor's office readings. "The difference is striking," said lead researcher Dr. Jose Banegas, of the Autonomous University of Madrid, Spain. He said the findings offer "unequivocal evidence" in support of ambulatory monitoring. "There is no scientific or clinical justification for not using ambulatory blood pressure monitoring, which should be part of the evaluation and follow-up of most hypertensive patients," Banegas said, referring to the medical term for high blood pressure. Ambulatory blood pressure readings are taken with a small monitor that patients wear for 24 hours to automatically record blood pressure every half hour or so. Unlike doctor's office readings, ambulatory monitoring captures real-life blood pressure changes, explained Dr. Raymond Townsend, of the University of Pennsylvania. That can, for example, detect "masked" high blood pressure, Townsend said. Those are cases where people have normal readings at the doctor's office, but their daily life tells a different story. Ambulatory monitors have been around for a long time, but they are used "infrequently" in the United States, said Townsend, who wrote an editorial published with the study. Both appear in the April 19 New England Journal of Medicine. One reason, Townsend added, is because insurers often don't pay. The new findings may encourage wider use, though, said Eileen Handberg, a member of the American College of Cardiology's Prevention of Cardiovascular Disease Leadership Council. It's "hard to argue with" results from such a large study, said Handberg, who was not involved with the research. They're based on a Spanish registry with information on almost 64,000 adults whose primary care doctors ordered ambulatory blood pressure readings for various reasons. Some had borderline-high readings in the office, for instance, while others had suspected "white-coat" hypertension. That refers to doctor's office readings that are higher than what a person usually has during their typical day. Over roughly five years, just over 3,800 died. It turned out that ambulatory blood pressure were a better predictor than office readings -- 14-point a person's 24-hour (top number) pres-ambulatory monitor of death rose by 58. That was with other including office-readings -- taken into account. The picture was different: office readings: numbers were relatively increased risk of once ambulatory measurements, themselves, were no longer predictive of patients' death risk. About 8 percent of the study group was found to have masked hypertension. In some cases, those people were on high blood pressure medication, but while their condition looked well-controlled based on office readings, their ambulatory readings showed differently. Those people had the highest risk of dying during the study period -- between two and three times higher, versus people with normal blood pressure. Similarly, people with white-coat hypertension were 79 percent more likely to die, compared with those with normal blood pressure. There has been debate over whether the white-coat phenomenon is "benign," Banegas said. "Our study demonstrates that it is not," he said. Handberg agreed. She said that patients with high numbers at the office sometimes argue that their blood pressure is normal when they check it at home. But, Handberg said, that white-coat effect probably reflects what your blood pressure does anytime you are stressed. "It's probably spiking when you're cut off in traffic, too," she noted. Should you have ambulatory monitoring? It might be wise, Handberg said, if there is any question over whether you really have high blood pressure, or whether your blood pressure medications are working. If your doctor does not have ambulatory monitors, a home monitor is the next best thing, Banegas said. Townsend agreed. A home monitor will not allow continuous readings, he noted, but using it regularly will give you "additional information." The study was partially funded by Spain-based Lacer Laboratories, which makes ambulatory monitors.

पत्नी क्या है

पत्नी इश्वर का बनाया हुआ पूर्णों के लिए एक नया वार्षिक रिश्ता है। जिंदगी की गाड़ी चलाने के लिए यह दो पहियों की जरूरत है तो पहला पहिया पत्नी ही है। पत्नी को अद्वितीय भी कहते हैं। अर्थात् वो पुरुष का आधा शरीर होता है। पुरुष व्यवसायिक कारों का संचालन करता है तथा पत्नी घर का प्रबंधन देखती है। इसलिए इसे घरवाली शब्द से भी सम्बोधित किया जाता है। पत्नी के सहयोग के बिना पुरुष अपूर्ण तरकीब ही कर सकता है। क्योंकि किसी काम की सफलता या असफलता का माहिल घर से ही चालू होता है। यदि आपको पत्नी अच्छी है तो वो और आपके कंधे से कंधे मिलकर चलती है।

तो आप जिंदगी की हारी बाजी को भी जीत सकते हैं। इतिहास गवाह है कि सावित्री सत्यवान को यमराज से वापस ले आयी थीं। यदि आपको पत्नी अच्छी नहीं है तो वह आपके विनाश का कारण भी बन सकती है। सफल वैवाहिक जीवन का है यह राज न करें व्यर्थ में धरनी को नाराज नहीं तो आप भी नहीं कर पायेंगे राज।

यदि पति और पत्नी के आपसी सम्बन्ध अच्छे हैं और दोनों एक दूसरे पर 100 प्रतिशत विश्वास करते हैं तो आपको प्रगति को कांटे भी नहीं रोक सकता है। गृहस्थ जीवन का आधार स्तर है पति। गृहस्थ जीवन के प्रत्येक सुख व दुःख में पति के साथ रहती है। इसलिए इसे जीवन साथी या जीवन की साझेदारी कहते हैं। पति का प्रत्येक सुख व दुःख में पति के साथ रहती है। इसलिए इसमें कभी भी दरर नहीं पड़ती चाहिए। अर्थात् विश्वास की नींव मजबूत होनी चाहिए। क्योंकि मजबूत नींव पर बने मकान की आधिकारी भी कुछ नहीं बिंगड़ पाती हैं। डा. प्रताप मोहन भारतीय, 308, चिनार ए-2, ओमेक्स पार्क, बुद्ध बद्री-173205 (हिंदू) मो- 09736701313.
